The Curious Case of Form and Function in Complex Systems

Casper van Elteren is born in picturesque Amsterdam. The author embodies the quintessential spirit of Dutch creativity and wit. From a young age, his insatiable curiosity and boundless ingenuity have driven him to explore the world through a unique lens. His works, though not widely read, resonate deeply with a silent yet appreciative audience who admire his ability to capture the essence of the human experience with subtle brilliance.

“Casper van Elteren has a particular talent for elucidating a complex topic by tackling it from multiple angles and focusing on salient details without losing sight of the greater story and context. He naturally navigates the issue at both macro and micro levels of analysis, and clearly articulates how to reconcile the two.”

– J.D.A de Bouter

“The picture of Casper on this book reminded me that before he started his PhD, Casper was actually a healthy, happy and skinny person.”

– W.M. Rouwhorst

“Casper’s work exemplifies how someone with broad interests can still delve into the core of their subject. This thesis not only demonstrates impressive breadth and depth but also excels in both form and function.”

– B. Chatel
